My Next Steps: Getting ready to leave the hospital

A new patient discharge readiness resource is now available to help Albertans become more active participants in their transitions from hospital to home.

1. What is the My Next Steps guide?

My Next Steps is a new patient self-management tool to help patients share what matters most to them, and to have their questions answered before they are discharged from the hospital. It offers questions to consider, information, and resources to support patients and families in having discharge and transition conversations with their care team.

My Next Steps can help staff be more efficient with answering patient questions well in advance of the actual discharge.

2. Why is the My Next Steps guide important for patients?

Patients have shared that it is important to have meaningful and understandable discharge conversations with their care team, where they can have their questions answered in a useful and timely manner, potentially reducing the need to return to the emergency department or be readmitted.

This guide will ultimately support patients to be active partners in their care, will improve patient experiences, and will improve patient-and family-centred care delivery.

3. What type of patients will benefit from receiving My Next Steps?

My Next Steps can be used for most adult patients across Alberta, regardless of their condition or reason for their hospital admission. Patients are encouraged to have their designated support person or family member with them (in person or virtually) when reviewing My Next Steps and during their discharge conversations, particularly for those with cognitive challenges, dementia, mental health conditions or challenges with understanding the information.

4. Who should go through My Next Steps with the patient?

Members of the care team, such as a nurse, transition coordinator, physician, or other provider, can help ensure patients' questions are answered before discharge. A staff script is available to help introduce the guide to patients and family/caregivers.

5. What if I don't have enough time to go through it or I can't answer all the patient's questions?

It's okay if you don't have all the answers. Help the patient get their questions answered by the most appropriate member(s) of their care team. Remember, discharge conversations don't have to be a one-time event and can happen anytime during a hospital stay.

To help you work as efficiently as possible, give My Next Steps to patients well in advance of their discharge conversation so they can determine which questions they need answered.

6. How does MNS complement the patient discharge summary or After Visit Summary?

The discharge summary or After Visit Summary gives specific details about medical history and post-hospital care. My Next Steps helps patients navigate the conversations that lead up to the actual discharge.

7. When should patients receive the My Next Steps guide?

According to patient, family and other stakeholder feedback, My Next Steps is most helpful when shared with patients upon admission, during rapid-round conversations and at least three days prior to estimated date of discharge (EDD). Patients could also receive My Next Steps from their primary care providers prior to a planned hospital admission, or from a specialist during a pre-surgery consultation.

9. Is My Next Steps available in multiple languages?

My Next Steps is currently available in English. The guide will be translated into multiple languages in the future.

10. Who was involved in creating My Next Steps?

My Next Steps was co-developed by a team comprised of patient and family advisors from across the province. Consultations and collaboration with multiple teams and frontline staff informed its development. My Next Steps is part of the implementation of Alberta's Home to Hospital to Home Transitions Guideline initiative, which aims to improve transitions in care.
